If any parasites are found, we will call you with treatment options. *Keep in mind tapeworms can be missed in a fecal exam as they do not typically shed eggs as other parasites. If you see small white "rice-like" worms in your pet's stool, please inform our office.

Vaccination is the most common veterinary preventative measure in history. It is a safe and effective way to protect pets and people from serious disease.

It is common for your pet to experience mild side effects from vaccination. Typically starting within hours of vaccination, any symptoms are most often mild and usually do not persist for more than a few days. Common symptoms may include:

Mild fever, decrease in social behavior, diminished appetite or activity, sneezing or other respiratory signs with intranasal vaccines, and discomfort or mild swelling at the injection site(s).

Rare side effects, such as an allergic reaction, may occur. Your pet may experience symptoms of a more serious reaction to the vaccine within minutes or hours of the vaccination.
